

Chapter-7

Chapter 7, which means the month of December the very cold month. I remember sending you a photo of me wearing the carrot coloured hoodie, I guess that was in the end of November but I don't know. So this much went pretty much smooth for the first half. My examinations were going on and was getting ready to return to home for a long winter break. I guess I was back home by the early mid of that month and in the same month you had an Amritsar trip planned that too with Amyra, Oh, I remember this one incident where you got mad at me real bad when I jokingly said that I will play with Amyra only and you got really possessive and mad at me, kinda cute but yes returning back to this month, I am at home, you're planning a trip. I get really nice photos but by the end of your trip you feel a bit less attended and get really mad at me. You know whenever in the back of my mind I've had any realisation that the things are going good, the things have went south soon after, I don't know what it is with me but yeah, so that was like one of the major major dispute of ours and you were mad at me for a few days straight. We talked it all out, from this I remember a major dispute thing also happened in the month of July most probably where I said something like breakup and you was mad sad and we weren't even in a relationship back then no even the confession had happened, that was also the time where I understood how much I wanted you and also this month's dispute which came with a lot of things to be understood. I really loved the way we one day had the conversation and talked it all out and like understood the differences and worked on them. This month was like the movies you know, things are going good by the end they falter a bit but soon after by the end, the climax things end good and that's what happened we together ended this month by wishing each other a happy new year. I remember having a conversation in which I asked you to gift yourself to me wrapped up in a red ribbon. Ooh! I don't think you remember this.